Going to the Mountain

A story by Aditi Blomgren Priestess of the Goddess, Priestess of Avalon, Priestess of ElAna.

There we were, all on our way to the sacred mountain. The journey had been planned for a full sun-cycle. Some of us had booked our fares well in advance, paid our fees, spread the announcement far on the great web of connections. We had packed our best robes and sacred objects, sat on many occasions meditating on the new era that was dawning, the return of the Great Mother. For a couple of days clouds had been gathering, softening the intense Mediterranean September sun. There was even a sprinkle of rain making the uneven pavement in the narrow alleyways in the heart of city, slippery to walk on. The light became milder, the breeze was cooling. I even shuddered a bit and pulled my scarf around my shoulders. That same evening my friend and hostess alerted me to the news of cataclysmic rainfall and flooding in the city we would have to pass on our way. Still, after some enquiries it seemed the trip would still be possible. The following morning we gathered outside the beautiful Goddess Temple and took our seats in a large vehicle, expertly maneuvered by our amazon driver. She would eventually and safely bring us to our goal. Alas, what trials we had to endure on our way! It started off easily enough. We sang and joked; the roads were clear. The previous night's horror images felt vaguely unreal. A few hours passed as the surrounding landscape rolled away, dotted with charred tree skeletons from the recent wildfires. Then the wind gathered strength, the rain became a raging downpour, the skies opened, the cyclone whirled around us like crazy weather witches stirring their cauldron. The air electric, deep thunder and bolts of lightning thrown willynilly from above. We were being welcomed by the old wise one of the mountain but also shook up by reports from the other participants who were stuck on the road. Some responded with anger and fear, emotions that always manage to worm their ways in like thriving parasites, but we searched in our hearts and knew that the best way was forward.

Forward: passing sinkholes, through flooded streets, starting our climb up the mountain, rivers overflowing, old stone walls collapsed on the roadside together with all the debris the streams had flushed out, everything thoroughly cleansed. Eight of us arrived at our destination which was caught in the gloom of the day without proper light, shutters closed to the pounding rain seeking every little crack it might penetrate. Forward: creating sacred space, transforming a crowded conference hall. Beauty, presence, Goddess of the land, all welcomed, visible and sensed. Before we started the first ceremony two more travellers had made it up the mountain, against all odds, and one more the following morning. Goddess might not have got the festival that was planned, but the one she wanted. We were made aware of our smallness in the face of the forces of nature, Her forces. We could sense the loss and suffering around us: on a small scale the changes we had to negotiate and the friends we would not meet, on a grander scale the tragedies in so many lives around us; lives lost, livelihoods lost. Balancing on the threshold of bliss and compassion, grief and immense gratitude, we listened and waited, adapted and celebrated. We walked the path of reincarnation, we welcomed Goddess in Her different apparitions around the world, we danced and created ceremonies. We were blessed by Her waters, cleansed and refreshed, just as the land around us. As I write this, I realise that it was only two weeks ago that we shared our closing ceremony back in the temple. Since then, so much has passed. I can sense a change in visibility, and I hope I will be able to trust my initiation and the connection I felt with Goddess, Her world, Her people. There is no separation: one planet, one biosphere, one love, I dare believe that.

Why Celebration and not Festival ?

As you already realized, we have changed the title from Festival to Celebration. That is so conscious to us as we leave in the land of the Celebrations. Also we wanted to use a word that is closer to the greek word Εορτή or Πανηγύρι.

So we will celebrate the Goddess all together as a small village of people. The essence is closer to our culture and our traditions.

Οπαααα brothers and sisters, it is time to celebrate and create peace.

Where ?

This time we decided to celebrate the Goddess in Athens. And again we were thinking a lot in which area of Athens and what place can hold the space for the Celebration that we want to share with you all. So we prayed to the Goddess and She gave us the answer that we were looking for.

First of all, we would like to provide a cozy celebration, like a small village that we are coming all together around the altar to remember and to express our love for the Lady Goddess.

So, this time we will celebrate into our official Goddess Temple at Peristeri street.
